Snapdragon Recommendations

EFFICIENCY IN SNAPDRAGON VARIETIES FOR GREATER PROFIT.

Producing that crop with the lowest possible cost continues to be the problem of major importance. Seven month crops, 50-54° temperatures, pinching, pruning and suckering add viciously to crop costs.

Cost conscious growers are gradually learning to appreciate the savings in crop time, temperature and labor that direct benching of small seedlings, single stem procedure with closer spacing and lower temperatures provide.

The classification of snapdragon varieties should be based on their response to a given temperature.

Many of our so-called winter flowering varieties are outstanding in the spring program.

Many of the so-called spring varieties can be flowered in winter if the higher proper temperature and longer timing environments are provided. The summer, high temperature group requires the lighter temperature for maximum performance.

Given night minimums of 46° the first, fast group tolerates the low temperature and produces high quality to most efficient advantage. The second, intermediate group flowers very slowly and frequently unevenly.

The third, slow group often goes blind or becomes extremely vegetative.

Given night minimums of 50° the fast group flowers rapidly. Under low light conditions spikes are often too short and non-continuous. With the brighter days of early spring, performance is markedly improved.

The intermediate group requires this minimum for winter flowering and tolerates well somewhat higher temperatures for spring crops. The slow group continues to vegetate.

Given night minimums of 54° and higher the fast group is forced too rapidly with premature flowering on shortened thin stems. The intermediate varieties also mature too rapidly. Short spikes and lowered quality are the result.

The slow group elongates uniformly and achieves maximum performance with this environment.

Within each color group the varieties are described and listed in their normal sequence of flowering. Each variety is further classified according to temperature response. This permits easy reference to the suggestions given for sowing and planting for any desired flowering date.

PETUNIA F-1 HYBRID MULTIFLORA SINGLE GLITTERS (see front cover)

1957 All-American Bronze Medal Winner

Glitters petunia is the first real red and white bicolored introduction. It grows only 8 inches high.

Glitters seems much more uniform in its starred or striped red and white color than the blue and white bicolors and this is a rich Fire Chief red with contrasting white stripes.

Blooms are about 2 inches across, freely borne from spring to fall, simply covering the plants.

Use it for pots, boxes and urns as well as for bedding.

Glitter is a vigorous hybrid and quite disease-resistant.
